The Senster

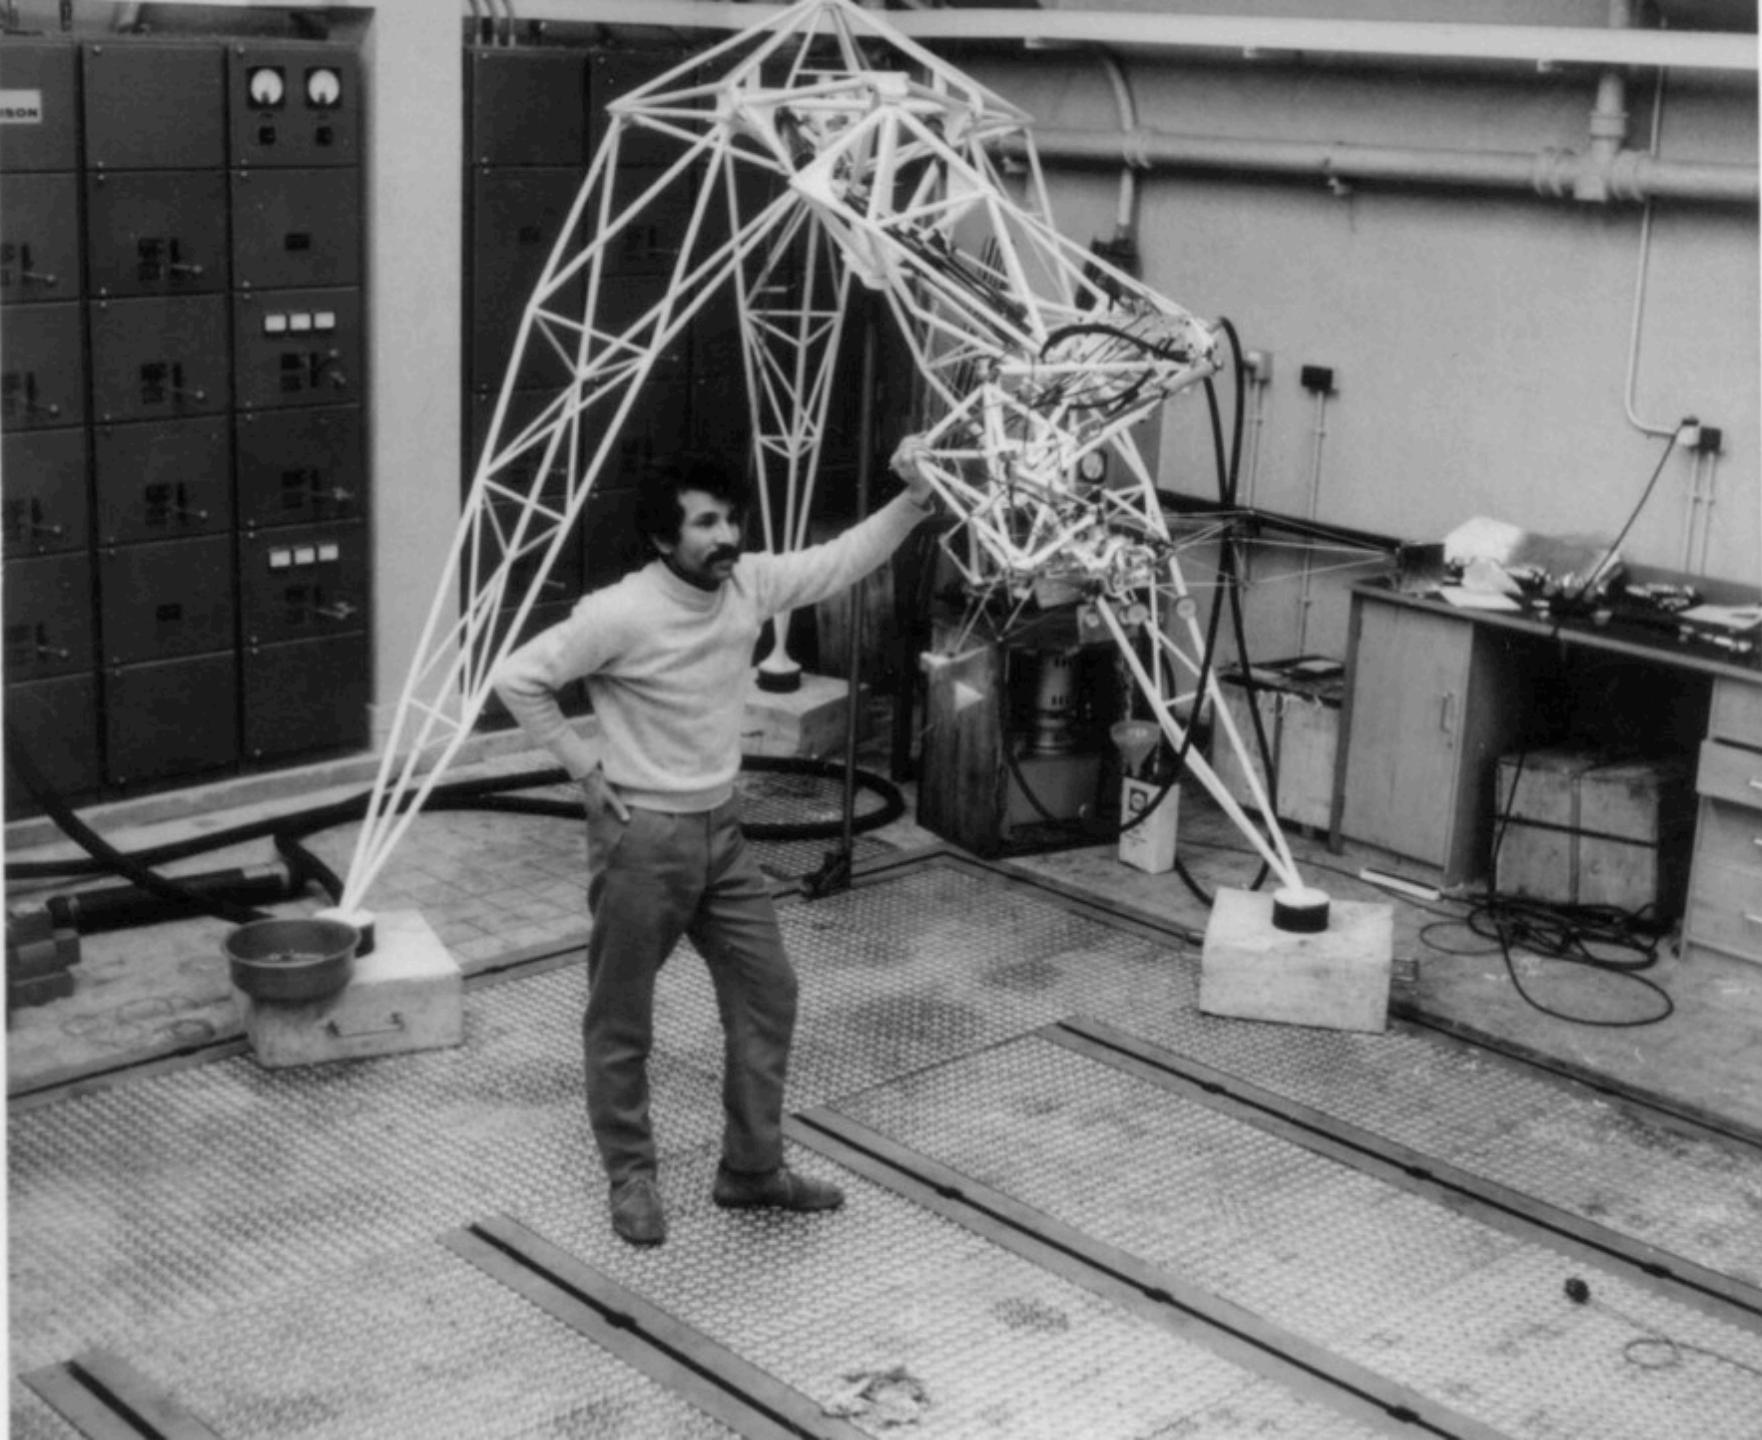

- Commissioned by Philips for the Evoluon in Eindhoven
- Built from May 1968 to September 1970

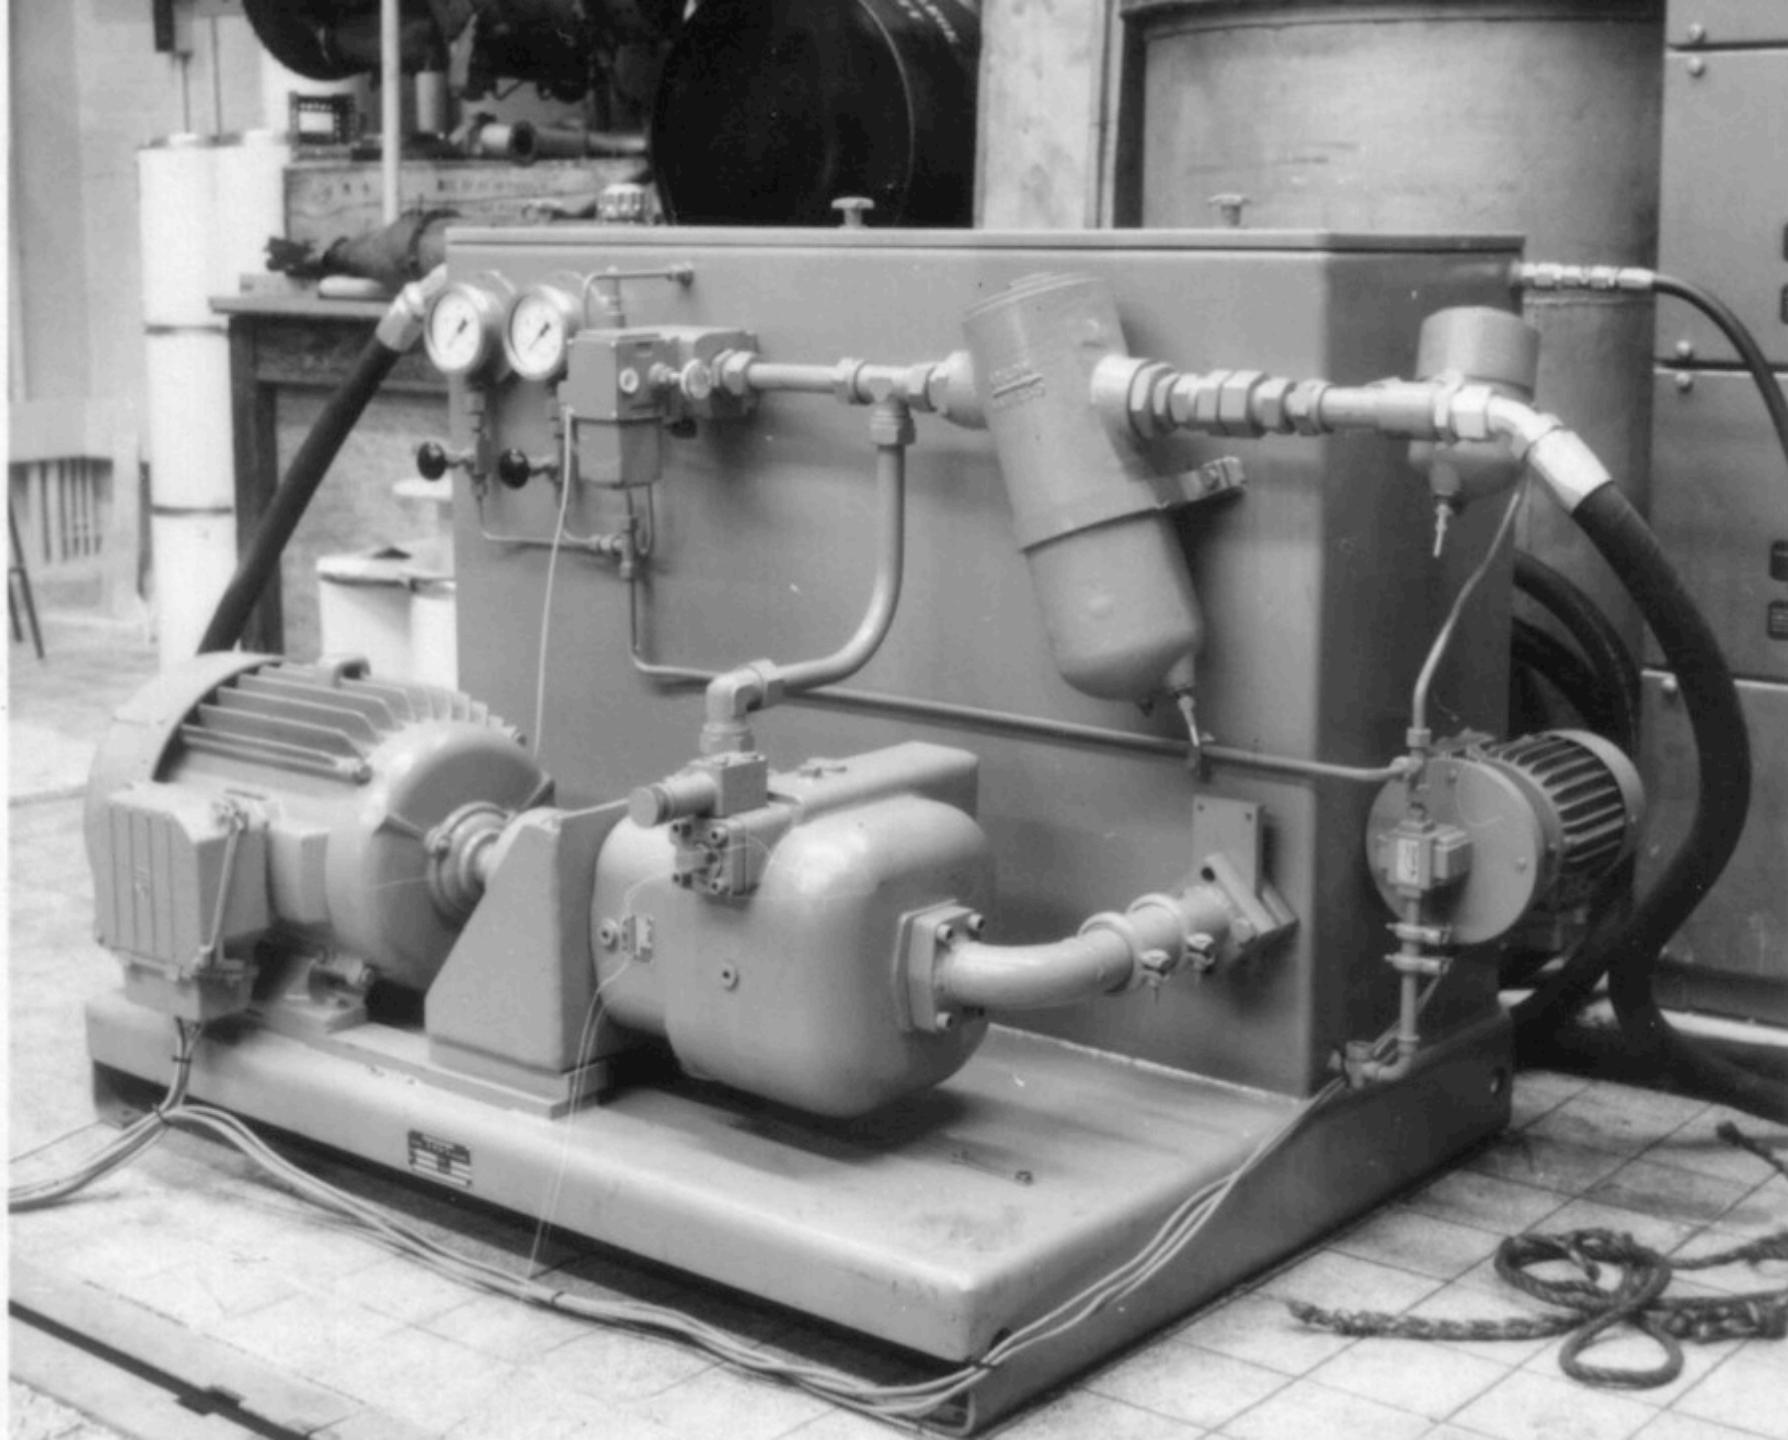

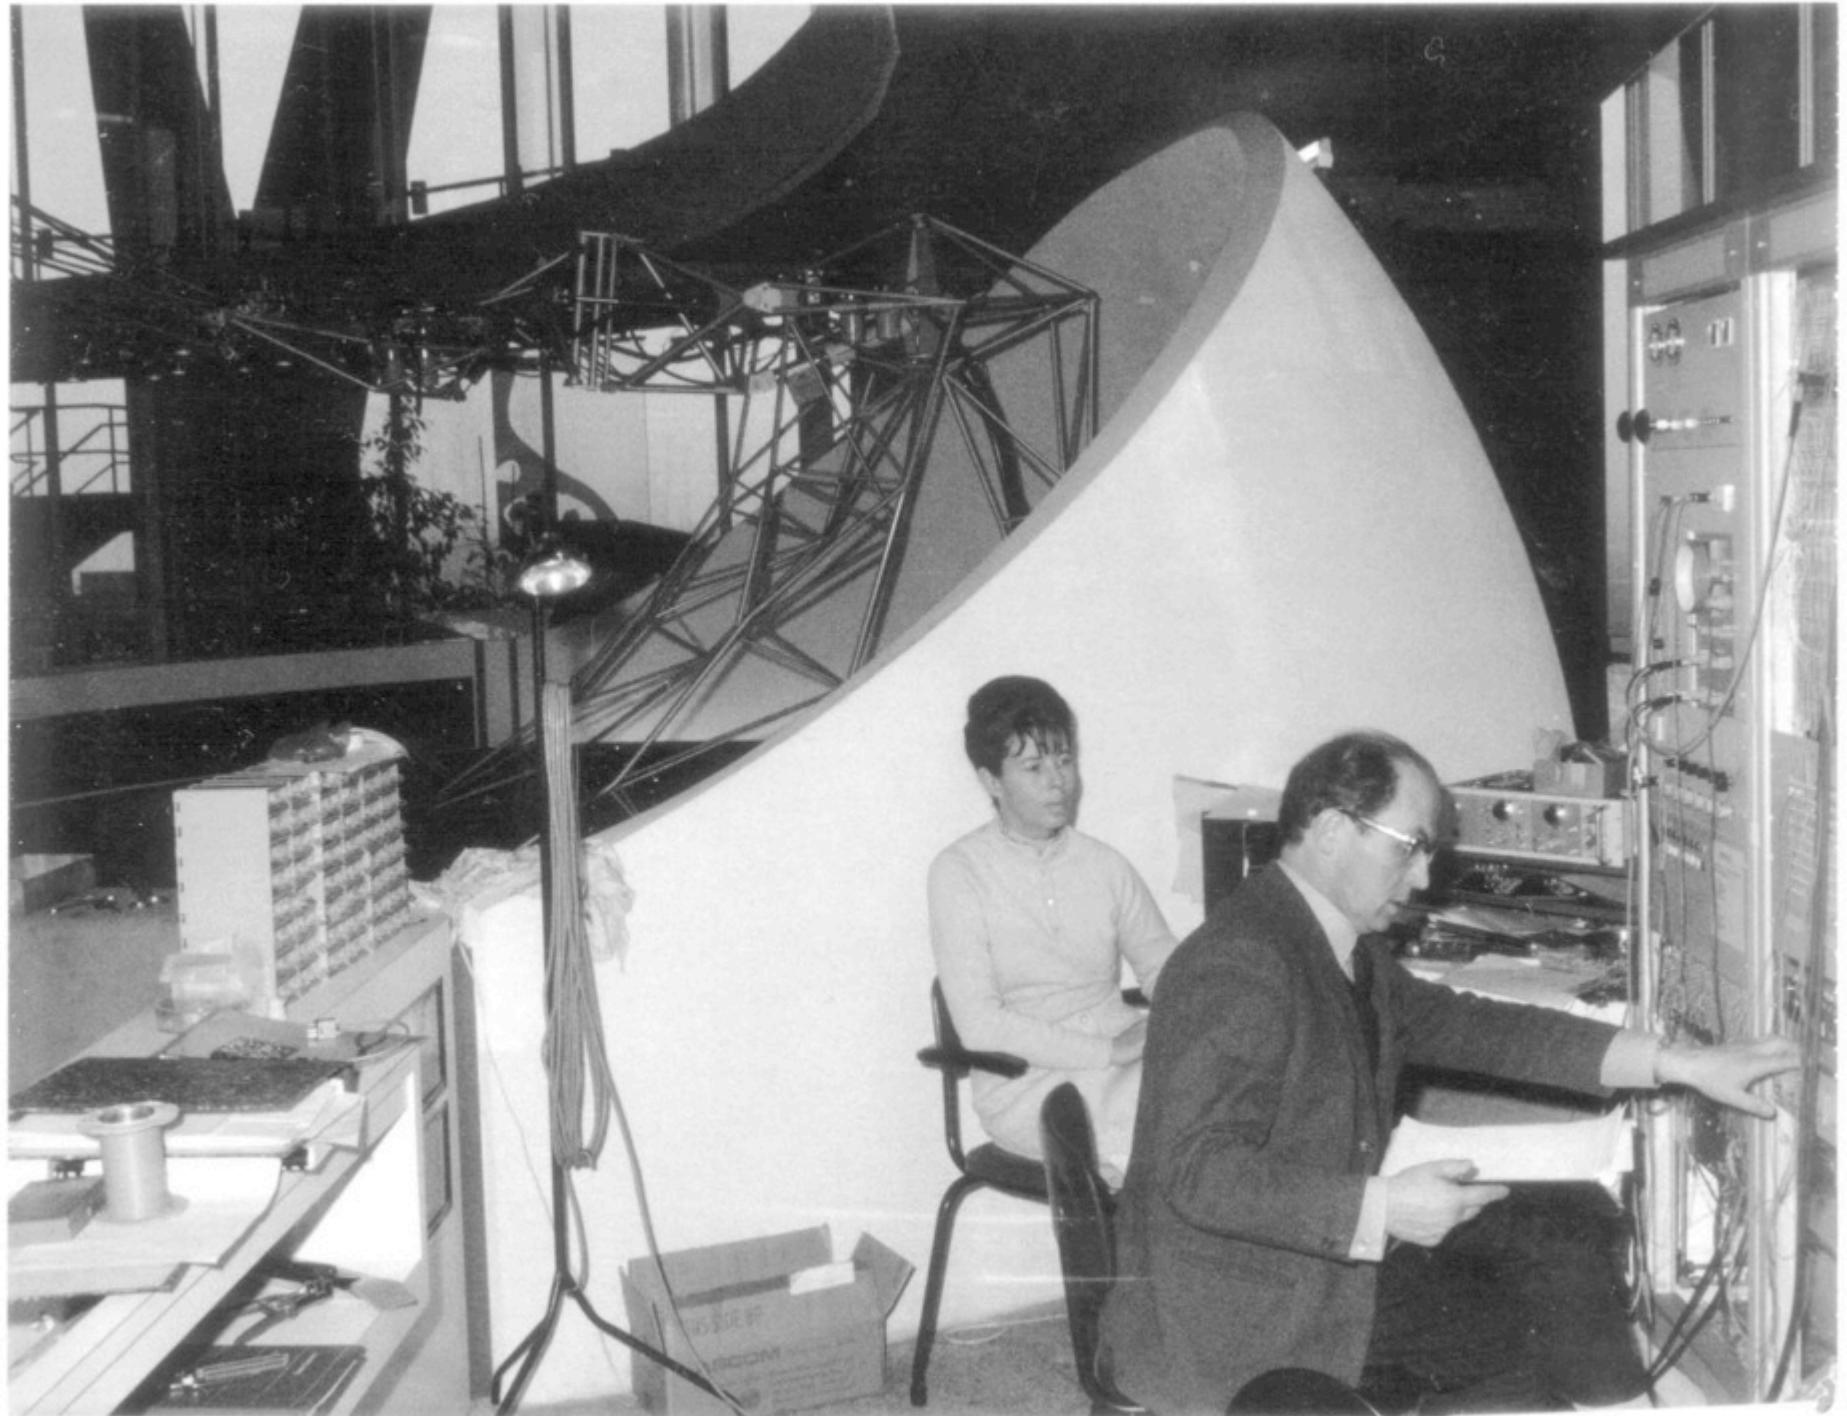

Senster at UCL

- Established close link with the Mechanical Engineering department at UCL
- Work on the Senster moved there for its last year (July 1969)

- shipped to Eindhoven June 1970
- Unveiled in September 1970

What is the artwork?

- The welded truss structure?
- The hydraulic system?

What is the artwork?

- The computer?
 - No original models left anywhere in the world

Philips P9201 with 8k core memory

P9202 General Purpose Computer

What is the artwork?

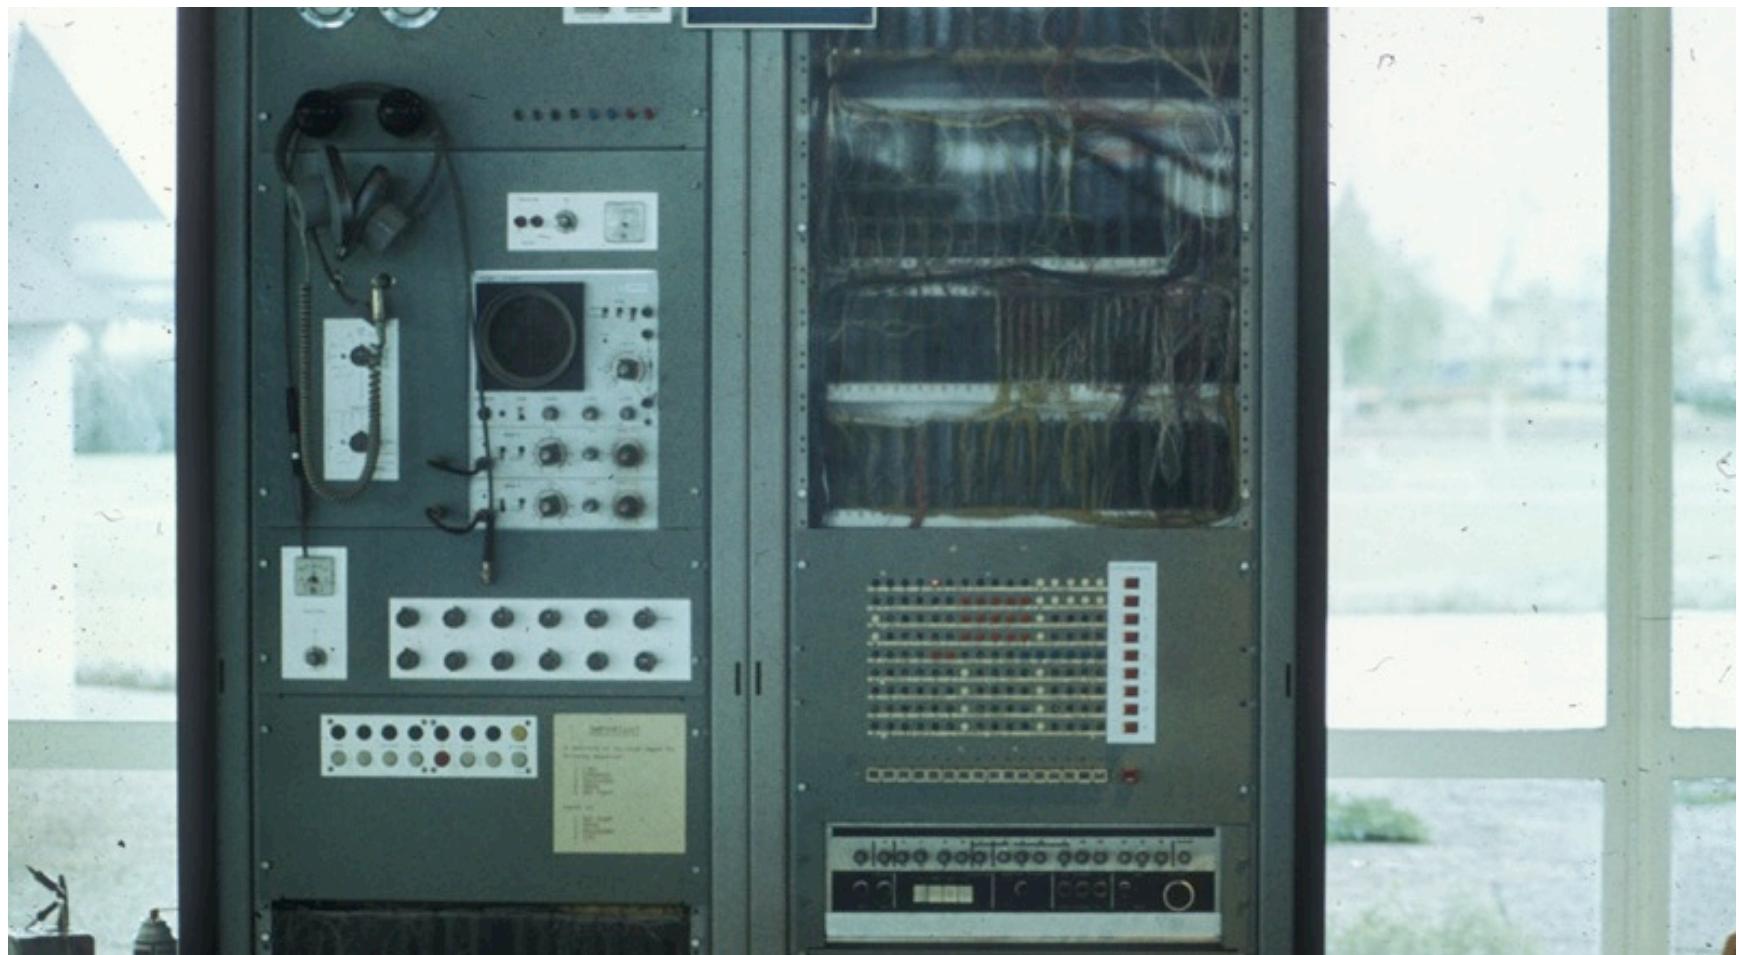

- The computer software?
 - Meaningless without the hardware to run it on
 - Is an emulator OK?
 - The expertise to understand it?

Recording the work

- The video record
 - 8mm film transferred to VHS then digitised...
- The photographic record
- Paper documentation
- Visitors' memories

Preserving the artifact?

- Does it have to move?
- Do all the parts have to be original?
- Is a copy OK?
- What about obsolete parts?

Preserving the artifact

- Compare with industrial heritage preservation
- Every time an engine is run it wears some more
- Is it better to preserve the artifact or show it running?
- Moving systems need maintenance & repairs

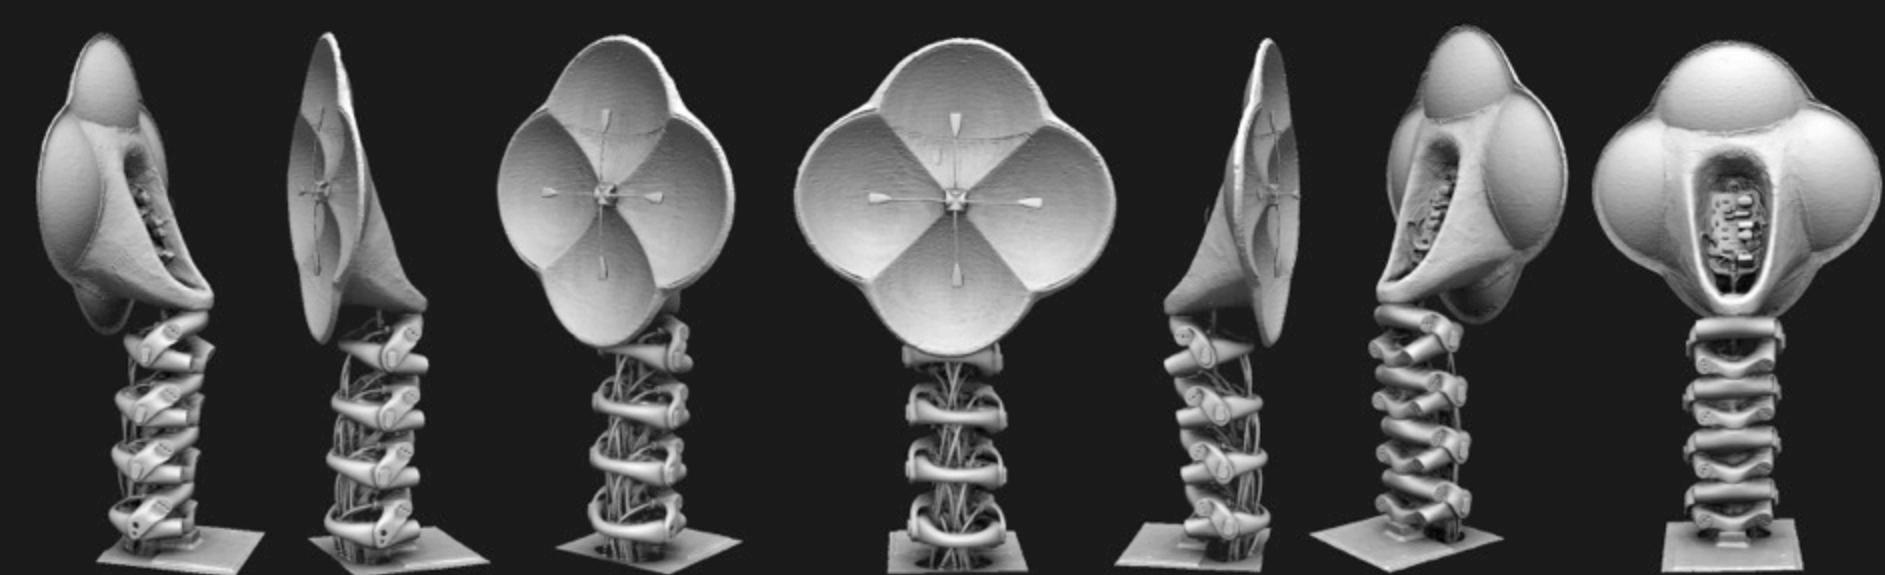

“Design with Heritage” project

- 6 month project in 2013
- Partners:
 - Douglas Dodds, V&A, curation
 - Jana Schulze, V&A, curation
 - Mona Hess, UCL, 3D scanning cultural objects
 - “Sample and Hold” 3D scanning company
 - Alex Zivanovic, Middlesex University, engineering

sample & hold - Design with Heritage - SAM - WIP 002

Possible collaboration?

- I've run a website since 1997 about Ihnatowicz's work (www.senster.com)
- A small sub-set of documents and records
- Olga, his widow has a larger collection
- Some scanned for the Cache project but not publically available

Possible collaboration?

- How about an online collection/archive?
- Partnership between experts in curation and experts in engineering
